A NEW RIP VAN WINKLE

One morning Walter Van Winkle, a lineal descendant of the great Rip, awoke in the Catskills. The only difference between the first and the last Van Winkle was that the first slept twenty years, the last forty. Walter had gone to the mountains one summer with a party of young New York bank clerks, had got separated from the others and had taken a four decade nap. Descending the mountain, he footed it to Catskill and was surprised to come upon a rallway station. A train was pulling out, and he jumped aboard. conductor on collecting his fare punched a printed slip and handed it to him.

"What'll I do with it?"

The conductor passed on without reply, and a passenger explained that the slip was a check on the conductor to guard against his stealing the fare collected. Van Winkle looked at his informant aghast.

St. Petersburg, May 28.—Searches of lodgings of Social Democratic deputies are now of almost daily occurrences here. The authorities have clues to several branches of the Social Democratic organizations, which have been conducting a special propagands.

Officials of the secret police yesterday visited the apartments of Deputy Kirkhodko (Constitutional Democrat) of Tehernisoff, and found documents showing that a railroad men's organization is making preparations for another general strike. So soon as the investigation is completed the public prosecutor will demand the suspension of M. Krikhodko who is a railroad workman, in order to place him on trial.

A number of Social Democratic deputies, who have been holding a conference in London, have arrived at Halaing fors to prepare for the return of the coner deputies to Russia by way of Finland. They found that the Finnish police, under instructions from the Sen ale, were everywhere demanding the passports of those bound for the Russian frontier, making the repatriation of the deputies most difficult.

M. Gurko, assistant minister of the interior, has challenged M. Roditcheff, member of the executive committee of the bar association and member of par-liament, to a duel, alleging that M. Roditcheff's recent speech in the Douma on the famine situation was intended as an insult to him.

WASHINGTON'S WOOING.

Matters of Importance Forgotten Bocause of Martha Custis.

In the traditions of any member of the Washington family the sicry of Martha Curtis is of supreme importance, writes Corn A. Moore in the New Broadway Magazine.

It happened one day that she was visiting at the plantation of a neighbor, Major Chamberlayne, when there came riding in haste an officer in the British uniform. The business that he had with the major he transacted quickly, declining an invitation to stay because, as he declared, he was on his way to the governor at Williamsburg on matters of importance. But the host repeated the invitation more urgently, slyly remarking that he had also beneath his roof the handsomest widow in Virginia, a young and charming woman. Ah, a lady in the case! That was different. But the plans of men have often waited on Cupid. When the officer bowed low over the hand of the lady whom he met in the major's drawing room he forgot Williamsburg and the governor, and she, pleased with the courage of that colonel, George Washington, of whose military fame she had heard so much, scintillated and sparkled with even more than her usual fascination. That evening, long after the rest of the household had retired, he and the charming widow sat by the fireplace in the shadowy drawing room quite without a chaperon to regulate the tide of swiftly moving events.

Soon there was a resplendent wedding at the home of the bride. Directly afterward a coach and six horses. guided by liveried black postilions, conveyed the newly married pair to her town house in Williamsburg. Business interests for some time demanded the presence of Colonel Washington at the capital. Later he took his bride and her two children, Martha Parke Custis and John Parke Custis, to his own estate at Mount Vernon, where they enjoyed that happy domestic life which is celebrated in history.
